

BYU Living Legends Touring Native Lands in North America

Living Legends, one of Brigham Young University's premier performing groups, will tour the northern United States and Canada this May, with performances in Montana, Alberta, and British Columbia. The tour will focus on outreach and performances in Native communities.

Seasons, is a heartfelt celebration of Latin American, Polynesian, and Native American cultures. Through vibrant music and dance, Seasons honors the traditions that have shaped the lives of the performers and their ancestors. From the islands of Polynesia to the Native American plains and the vibrant landscapes of Latin America, Seasons tells the story of life's many stages—seasons of faith and prosperity, pride and conflict, healing and renewal.

In addition to public performances, Living Legends will participate in community outreach events, including cultural exchanges and joint performances with local Indigenous groups. During their stop at the McPherson Playhouse in Victoria, the group will host a special event with local Indigenous leaders and collect donations to support community initiatives.

Former President of the National Assembly of Nicaragua, Santo René Núñez Téllez, praised Living Legends, saying:

“A culture does not die when it dies; it dies when it is forgotten... [The Living Legends] show rescues culture and heritage.”
